ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Numerous people have provided me with invaluable assistance in the preparation of this study. I owe a special debt of appreciation to Dr. Gary B. Mills, the director of this dissertation, and his wife, Elizabeth Shown Mills. They helped me to understand the nature of genealogical research and how to organize the vast array of data. They never tired of answering my many questions as well as informing me of sources that I otherwise might have overlooked. I wish to thank Dr. Forrest McDonald and his wife Ellen for their patience, guidance, and support. I thank Professors Howard Jones, William D. Barnard, and Gordon B. Neavill for their suggestions.

I wish to thank the pastors and staffs of the following Mobile churches: St. John's Episcopal, Trinity Episcopal, Christ Church, Government Street United Methodist, St. Francis Street Methodist, Good Shepherd, Central Presbyterian, Government Street Presbyterian, First Baptist, and St. Joseph's Catholic. I am especially indebted to the Most Reverend Oscar Lipscomb and his staff at the Catholic Center in Mobile—Mary Connick, Becky Devery, Norma Koppersmith, and archivist Eida Rehm.

I also wish to acknowledge a number of individuals and institutions. I express thanks to the staff of the Records Division of the Probate Office, Mobile County Courthouse, especially Grace Hood, Marilyn Jones, Judy Cornelius, Jo Ann Meadow, and Lessie Hallum. Jay Higginbotham and Richard Sumrall of the City of Mobile Archives also provided assistance. Dr. Michael Thomason, Elisa Baldwin, and Joseph Brent of the University of South Alabama Archives helped in numerous ways, especially by keeping the archives open at all hours. I appreciate the assistance from the staffs of the Museum of the City of Mobile, Barton Academy, the Mobile Public Library, the Historic Mobile Preservation Society, and the Alabama Department of History and State Archives. I thank the staff of the University of Alabama Library, especially Frances Barton and Mary Marchant.

Several other people offered their help. Clinton King, a certified genealogical record searcher, not only shared his abstracts of some Mobile records with me but also his enthusiasm for my project. I express my appreciation to Mark and Vicky Boazman who took care of my personal matters during my absence from Tuscaloosa, and to Louis and Carol Smith who allowed me to use their computer to print a rough draft of this dissertation. I also wish to thank Dean William Macmillan of the University of Alabama's Graduate School who extended deadlines so that I could complete this study without additional hardships.

I wish to acknowledge the assistance and support of family members. I owe a special debt of appreciation to my brother Bernie whose knowledge of computers allowed me to perform tasks on which I might otherwise still be working. I thank him and his wife Betty for allowing me free access of their home during my visits to St. Louis in order to use their computers. For the support and encouragement offered by my parents and the values they instilled in me in order to complete such a project I am most appreciative and grateful. This work is dedicated to the memory of my father.
